Adult twin sisters Tabitha and Harper Frost are identical in appearance, but their similarities end there. In fact the women are so different, they have trouble maintaining a civil relationship. They usually try to keep their distance from one another. But when their family truly needs them, Tabitha and Harper have no choice but to set aside their quarrels to help. When they are reunited during the summer in Massachusetts, the twins begin to recognize that they were wrong to let their differences derail their relationship. Together, they must confront the current crisis and also deal with the pain of the past.
